“ Aunt Jenny, Sandie, Terri, & Ricky,

Your Dad always will be Uncle Sambo to me, and will be missed dearly by all.

He was my second dad who I could go to and talk. He was always straight from the hip with his answers, even though I may not of liked what I heard, I knew he loved me, because I too had to call and let him know I got back home, if I was by myself. I loved his sarcasm, that smirky deep laugh he would give to you, if you were being full of yourself or telling a tall tale to get out of trouble, then in his low voice the thunder of his thoughts he let you know; but you don't see the humor, until you get older and look back and appreciate that he was who he was and that he cared enough.

Aunt Jenny, you and Uncle Sambo made a good couple and a good example as parents to your kids and grandkids. Your home was the Kool-Aid house that all the kids gathered and wished their parents were more like you two. You two just had that special gift of caring and making others feel welcome.

Sandie, Terri, Ricky, know he loved you three very much and only want better for you three than he had. He was hard on you three about grades and following the line, because he and your mom worked hard to raise you right, send you to better schools, and hope all the quality time, made up for the quantity time they couldn't give you three and you would see and understand in time. BUT, watching you all at the funeral home Friday with your kids and grandkids, who are well mannered and respectful, your dad (and your mom) did his (their) job in raising you all right, because he (they) passed that gift on to you and you on to your kids, and them to their kids.

I hope on the hard days in your life you will stop and take those memories you have of your dad during ruff and good times and go back in time for a moment and either have a good cry, laugh or remember those times just the two of you shared together and realize hopefully that you were blessed to have him in your life and smile.

I love you all very much,
