“ My fondest memories of my grandfather are visiting him during the holidays; especially on Halloween. He would go all out by making an epic haunted house, dressing up in costume and taking us on hayrides through the woods/field and trick-or-treating down the streets. I can still remember the sound of his diesel tractor and the smell of the damp hay.

Around Christmas time, he would grow out his white beard and often dress as Santa Clause.

Whenever we went over for dinner, I remember him sitting at the far end of the dining table near the front door eating from a jar of pickled quail eggs or pigs feet. (I know I get my craving for boiled eggs from him.)

When I see an oyster shell, I am reminded of the countless times I saw Pawpaw Jimmy outside by his shop eating raw oysters with family and keeping the empty shells left behind.

I remember staying at his camp in Mississippi, eating his deer gumbo, and going to his Civil War reenactments. I remember that he liked black licorice.

So many memories will be cherished!
